Upon the withdrawal of E. Henry Powell as treasurer of the university, Charles Plympton Smith, president of the Burlington Savings bank, was chosen. Several changes have been made in teachers, but the high standing of those at the head of the various branches has in no wise deteriorated.

The department of medicine has had a very gratifying two years, owing largely to the annual appropriation of $10,000, voted in 1908 by the legislature, which permitted it to pass safely through a financial crisis, which threatened to close that branch of the college work. The number of students in at tendance has materially increased durng the last two years, the total number attendance this year being 188. H. C. Tinkham, dean of the college, points out many urgent needs, and wishes that the institution might be more closely related to the Mary Fletcher bospital, so that the students might study the cases in the words more freely, and watch the progress of the cases from day to
